Washington, March 30 (RHC)-- In what observers are calling a huge blow to civil rights in the United States, the Supreme Court has issued a unanimous ruling that will make it harder for people to sue over racial discrimination in employment and contract negotiations.

The U.S. high court threw out a lower court's ruling that had given the green light for a $20 billion racial bias lawsuit against Comcast, accusing the TV company of discriminating against Black-owned channels by refusing to carry their content.
