Beijing, April 24 (RHC)-- An planeload of medical products acquired in China arrived in Cuba with the purpose of strengthening its capabilities while fighting the COVID-19 pandemic, according to Cuban ambassador to China, Carlos Miguel Pereira.

The diplomat explained that this is the first flight chartered by Havana to transport essential supplies for the prevention, control and treatment of the deadly disease.

The ship arrived a few hours ago in Cuba and carried on board items such as masks, protective suits, diagnostic kits and also sample transport devices, the latter being key from the point of view of clinical management.
