Either opening the United States or keeping confinement to attempt to stop the pandemic, Trump faces a reality equally delicate and embarrassing.

It happens that reporting the wearing effects of Covid-19 reach the inside of the White House.

This was reported this Monday in Washington, two journalists from the Associated Press (AP), Kevin Freking and Zeke Miller.

That news agency highlighted the difficulties the president is having to convince a nation overwhelmed by the disease.

Even in White House experts on the subject are quarantined.

Among the Dr. Anthony Fauci, Director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, Dr. Robert Redfield, Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and Director of the Food and Drug Administration, Dr. Stephen Hahn.

Along with Senator Lamar Alexander, all because of ties with a collaborator of the Vice President Mike Pence, who is at present in self-isolation.

Alyssa Farah, Director of strategic communications on twitter wrote:

"This week the White House will emphasize precautionary measures and a sense of trust among citizens."

According to a recording obtained by the AP, Mike Pence said they are taking steps "to protect Trump's health."

It’s yet to be seen if they would equally try to alleviate the awful situation of millions of North Americans.

Meanwhile this Monday, Trump continued to criticize those states that have not begun their reopening.

Thus, six months after the start of the presidential elections, Donald Trump's situation has become very complex.
