Santo Domingo, (Prensa Latina) The Central American and Caribbean Sports Organization (ODECABE), announced the creation of a digital communication network, which will include a newscast with correspondents in all the countries that comprise it, media outlets disclosed.

According to a press release issued on the website of the Dominican Olympic Committee, ODECABE's president, Luis Mejia, expressed in an internal meeting with communicators from that body, 'we want to create a channel to guarantee that the activities of all countries are advertised.'

Likewise, he said that with the support of all, the Central American and Caribbean communications network will be formed, extensive to all Americas and the world.

The also member of the International Olympic Committee stated to be in times of integration and in the digital age, stressing the importance of harnessing the potential of each Committee to achieve that purpose.

Speakers from several nations participated in the meeting, presenting the advances experienced by communication systems in their territories, especially in relation to social networks.
