
Political Murders in Honduras Going Unpunished

03/09/2014

Social movements and political organizations fear that the recent murder of peasant leader, Margarita Murillo, will go unpunished.

The fear expressed by these organizations is based on a worrying pattern of uninvestigated murders which seem politically motivated.

The National Front of Popular Resistance (FNRP) and other political organizations have reported over 200 politically motivated murders since the year 2009, when President Manuel Zelaya was ousted by a military coup.
