China's official news agency, reported that the United States, by resorting to pressures of sanctions and economic instruments, wants to hurt the Iranian economy, under the pretext of blocking Tehran's influence in the Middle East, but Iran's authority is preventing the US from achieving its goals.

The report said Saturday that US President Donald Trump's restoring to US unfair sanctions is an excuse to stop Iran's nuclear program and influence in the Middle East, but Washington does not achieve its goals due to the power that Iran has in the region.

Referring to the withdrawal of Trump from Iran's nuclear deal known as JCPOA, the Chinese media said that Trump backed up a very important historic agreement and is now pushing for other countries to isolate Iran and hurt its economy.

Even the experts who accept the negative effects of sanctions on the Iranian economy believe that Iran's political stability will be preserved despite these measures, the report said.

Xinhua, quoting Matt Rusling, a US political analyst in Washington, points out that Iran is still linked to Europe in order to benefit from Iranian deal.

He adds, of course, that Iran has not yet made a decision to exit the deal, and therefore emphasizes to Europe that, in keeping with its commitment to the 2015 nuclear deal, it is necessary that Iran's interests are realized.
