

---

Venezuela Attorney General Begins Probe into Juan Guaidó, Looks to Ban Travel

---

29/01/2019

Tarek William Saab says that Guaidó's actions have caused detrimental harm to the nation qualifying him for certain measures including a ban from traveling outside the country.

The Attorney General of Venezuela Tareck William Saab reported Tuesday afternoon that a preliminary investigation by the Public Ministry against lawmaker and president of the in-contempt National Assembly, Juan Guaidó based on his responsibility in various events that have occurred since January 22, which "have damaged the peace of the Republic, the economy and national pride" he added.

RELATED Understanding Venezuela's Crisis: An Interview With Guillaume Long

The facts against Guaidó being investigated range from violent protests with deadly results to the implication of coercive measures carried out by the United States against Venezuela. All, occurred during January of this year.

Also, the prosecutor, who was at the Supreme Court of Justice (TSJ), announced that there are precautionary measures for the duration of the investigation, which prohibits Guaidó from traveling outside of the country.

