
'No one in Europe' wants second Iraq: Austrian president slams 'provocative' US Iran policy

15/05/2019

The US' reckless maximum pressure campaign against Tehran and nations dealing with it is deeply provocative and hurts international relations, Austrian President Alexander Van der Bellen said, warning against a major "crisis."

Speaking at a joint press conference with the Russian President Vladimir Putin in Sochi on Wednesday, Van der Bellen slammed the US sanctions against Iran by saying that such policies "do not help international relations" and only erode the system of global treaties.

READ MORE: US orders all non-emergency personnel to leave Iraq

"The fact that the US withdrew from the Iranian nuclear deal undermines trust in this agreement in general," he told journalists.

It is particularly provocative that the US reimposed its sanctions against Iran after pulling out of the deal and threatened the companies, which continued to work with Tehran, with punishment.

The Austrian leader also admitted that Europe has so far failed to "come up with a mechanism that would help companies effectively circumvent" the US restrictions. He also said that creating such an instrument is a "very laborious" task.

Putin and Austrian President Bellen hold joint press-conference in Sochi...

Van der Bellen then warned the US against going down its chosen path by saying that any additional pressure Washington puts on Iran "is going to undermine political relations" on the international arena "even further."

If America continues to put pressure on Iran, the whole situation risks spilling into another major crisis "as it happened in Iraq some years ago," the president warned, without elaborating.

No one in Europe wants this to happen.

Van der Bellen's words came amid growing fears that a military conflict could potentially break out between the US and Iran. These concerns were further fueled by the US decision to recall all non-essential personnel from its embassy in the Iraqi capital of Baghdad and a consulate in Iraq's northern town of Erbil. The developments have prompted Germany and the Netherlands to temporarily suspend its missions aimed at training the Iraqi forces.

Also on rt.com Baghdad won't let Washington use its territory in war against Iran – Iraq's envoy...

Earlier, the Iraqi ambassador to Moscow said that Baghdad would not let the US use the Iraqi territory in the event of a war against Iran, adding that it is not interested in another "devastating" conflict in the region.

Washington has deployed the USS 'Abraham Lincoln' Carrier Strike Group, as well as B-52 bombers, to "send a message" to Iran while constantly citing an allegedly increased threat from Tehran and criticizing those of its allies who doubted the claim.

US President Donald Trump has recently dismissed a New York Times report of a plan to send "120,000 troops" to the Middle East as "fake news," saying that it would "hopefully" not be necessary. He added, however, that if it did come to a hot conflict, "we'd send a hell of a lot more troops than that."

_Also on rt.com 'Attack Iran to get reelected': Twitter discovers Trump 'warned' of Iran conflict plot – but Obama's