
Venezuela: Fascist Attack Against the People

"The opposition people must understand that the revolutionary people are greater, and that we must live in peace," were simple but unequivocal words from a participant in the massive rallies in support of the electoral results that gave victory and reelection to President Nicolás Maduro, something that has not been recognized by the majority extreme right opposition group, supported by imperialism and governments that, in one way or another, play along.

The Supreme Court of Justice endorsed the results offered by the National Electoral Council, so the requirement to make public the acts in this regard is not really mandatory.

And from a legal point of view, there are no elements to question Maduro's reelection, whose results conform to the country's electoral norms and were difficult to manipulate.

In this context, Brazilian jurists attentive to the event stated that "there was no objective legal proof of any act, element or fact that could generate doubts about the integrity of the electoral voting process and system," and acknowledged that the cyber-attack carried out against the National Electoral Council delayed the results, so they recommended that in the next elections the security of the electronic system be improved.

It was also known that the extreme right was going to orchestrate acts of vandalism that for two days destroyed public property serving the population and caused the death of 28 people, among them eight law enforcement forces, so they were unable to remove a single "martyr", while all the participants in the vandalism were arrested, and it's expected that they will be presented as "political prisoners".

Both the visible head of fascism María Corina Machado, and its elderly puppet presidential candidate, the former CIA agent Edmundo González Urrutia, had already stated before the elections that they would not recognize their results, and then presented on a website created by them fake electoral records, which, of course, they could not hand over for verification.

In this regard, González Urrutia has been summoned three times by fiscal authorities to respond to the matter, but Corina had already declared for him that she would not appear, which is why they are trying to present him as a victim of the false persecution.

The Other War

After the failure of the “guarimbera” war, the extreme right is now joining the digital attacks of its sponsors and a war that’s seriously affecting the national electrical system.

This corroborates the thesis that the plan they are preparing will not end in hours, days or weeks, it’s a medium-term plan to try to fill Venezuela with strikes, so that when classes begin, part of the students are thrown out onto the streets, making the Venezuelan reality unviable and so that Maduro cannot exercise his government, so that the country remains in chaos.

This is added to the announcement by the United States of new sanctions, which will be added to the more than 900 existing ones, with the aim of undermining the country's economy.

However, the country has grown economically for 13 consecutive quarters.

Venezuela's economy grew by 8.78% in the second quarter of 2024, and the results of these last three years indicate that the economy is on a real path to recovery, reinventing itself and overcoming obstacles.

The oil sector increased by 11.08% in the second quarter of the year, while non-oil activity rose by 6.58%, driven mainly, by the positive performance of financial and insurance activities (20.9%), construction (18.4%), as well as manufacturing (8.8%).

Added to this is the fact that, politically, communal elections have been held, which brings democracy and the improvement of living conditions to the most remote parts of Venezuela, despite the riots and criminal acts of that extreme right so dear to imperialism, and which will be an obligatory topic for another comment.
