
Cuba Advocates for World Order Based on Peace and Development

16/10/2015

Cuba has called for an international order that guarantees peace and development without exclusions.

During the presentation of the annual report of the General Secretary of the United Nations, Cuba's ambassador to the UN, Rodolfo Reyes, said that in order to have real peace, it is necessary to achieve sustainable, egalitarian and inclusive development, to benefit all peoples and countries.

Ambassador Reyes also rejected the current international situation in which some governments use threats and military force against other countries, as well as the application of unilateral coercive measures.
