Included in the release is an email chain from February 15, 2016 titled 'Pushback on immigration,' which shows a request for Ken Salazar, who was the US secretary of the interior from 2009 to 2013, to write an op-ed to smear Bernie Sanders' "professed support for immigration."

The emails also reveal frustration from Clinton's camp over President Obama's reluctance to show support for her. Dated March 12, 2016, over a month after primaries began, advisor Neera Tanden asks Podesta "Can Obama even hint of support of Hillary before Tuesday? Really, just a directional nod would be helpful."

"Maybe they don't want to do this, but the stakes are pretty damn high in this election for him," Tanden says. Podesta asks "Why don't you push Valerie a little bit," possibly referencing Valerie Jarrett, senior advisor to Obama.

Podesta emailed Clinton's Director of Communications Jennifer M Palmieri about website Business Insider in an attempt to confirm Clinton's attendance at an event on April 12, 2015, the day she announced her run for president. They both referred to the publication as being right wing.

"Am I right that they're right wing? They get a fair amount of traffic," Podesta asked. "They are right wing, but Philippe weirdly has cultivated them," Palmieri replied.

The previous release revealed that many advisers close to the Clintons pushed for Bill's role in his wife's campaign for presidency to be reduced, as his "sex life could be damaging to her".

Clinton confirmed the authenticity of the previous release, clarifying comments exposed by the leak during Sunday's second presidential debate. Her admission to the National Multi-Housing Council in 2013 that politicians have "both a private position and a public position" was explained as being a discussion she had regarding the film 'Lincoln'.
