
Trump-Mexico: War on Several Fronts, Says Analyst

09/11/2016

Mexico, Nov 9 (Prensa Latina) Mexico is expecting a non-military war on several fronts, warned Mexican intellectual Enrique Krauze today in commenting on Donald Trump's victory in the United States presidential election.

Krauze said that his country will suffer a 'serious earthquake' and will face a commercial, economic, migratory, legal, diplomatic and other frontier war in the coming years.

The writer and historian said that the aftermath is felt by the collapse of the Mexican peso and predicted that manufactures and the national economy will be the collimator of the announced battles.

Given this situation, Mexicans have the obligation to unite, to conclude the disunity that has marked us above all in politics, he said in statements to the Despierta program of Televisa.

He said that the government has to present strategies to deal with this earthquake.

Here is announced an appearance of the governor of the Bank of Mexico, Agustín Cartens, and the Secretary of Finance, Jose Antonio Meade in this regard.
